define their code, highlight syntax, do code folding and so on.

Notepad++ is a very portable tool, and can work even from a USB stick. It makes auto-indentation a lot easier than other editors and supports brace highlighting as well.

The highly customisable user interface is a great feature of Notepad++, whether the user wants to create a split-screen, work in full-screen mode or apply themes from the Configurator.

Multiple cursors are a Notepad++ feature, and help in making code changes in several places at once. The user can find this feature in the Preferences menu and enable it from there.

8. Slack

Slack is the ultimate project management software that can make life easy as a developer, as a manager or as an entrepreneur.

Slack allows for all types of communication within a project team. The developers working in different directions can get a comprehensive view of the things they do. Channels are a fundamental feature of Slack and let you build teams on various work-related aspects.

The main features of Slack are listed below.

- a. Communication: Both face-to-face and face-to-screen communication are possible.
- b. Integrates file sharing: You can drag-and-drop files instantly, get and give reviews and feedback, etc.

- c. Mentioning: It lets you use @mention or a user group to include direct connotations to team members and specific works, teams, etc.

There are plenty of other tools that developers use around the world. However, to list them all is beyond the scope of this article.
