

You said it...

But I never got a call or any intimation that my subscription was due for renewal.

This invariably makes one question your marketing strategy; do you guys even care whether subscribers renew their subscriptions or not? Logic has it that you would, in the interests of building up your readership. Therefore, I believe that someone in your organisation was obviously not following some procedure. Hence this mail.

ED: Thanks for sharing this experience. We do send subscription reminders to clients in India. It seems there's been a system failure here—let us check and rectify it. We are also planning to use e-mails and SMS alerts to inform our subscribers about the status of their subscriptions.

Micromax modem not working on Linux OS

I'm a freelance writer and a crazy reader of LFY magazine. My modem does not work on the Linux OS. It's a Micromax 300G USB modem that works as storage media in its default mode. When you plug it in, the software in the modem gets installed and soon it toggles from the USB storage to modem mode. I have Googled around a lot but whatever solutions showed up, never worked in reality. I am using a super OS based on Ubuntu 9.10 and also use Lucid Lynx(10.04), and Fedora 12. My laptop is a quadboot. Please help me get past this.

ED: Allow us to go over this problem amongst ourselves and let's see if we can come up with a solution—no guarantees though. Do try and post it on our Facebook page too—www.facebook.com/linuxforyou. With over 29,000 fans, there is a good chance that someone might have an answer ready for you.

A link to LFY from a Tamil blog

I have been a reader of LFY for the last 2 years and have become a big fan of the magazine. Now I am a regular user of Ubuntu and have got others also to use it effectively, only due to LFY. I have started a blog in Tamil to write on free software tools available and their usage. Hence I would like to have a link to your site in my blog's homepage so that readers can get news about the free software world. Looking forward to your reply!

Promote LFY by placing website banners

In this month's LFY I found someone offering to 'promote LFY' by placing a banner on his website. I would love to promote your site by placing a banner on my site (www.giis.co.in) for the following reasons: I've been reading LFY from my college days (2003) and I believe it is very useful. And LFY organises events like the FOSS India Awards that recognise many open source programmers (like myself) from India.

PS: There is no money involved here per click or impression—it's free as in free speech. The only suggestion from my side would be that if the banner is simple and compact, it won't take much time to load.

ED: Thanks a lot for expressing interest in promoting LINUX For You by posting a link on your blog's homepage. My colleagues will shortly send you a banner ad that you can place on your website. In turn, we will also try and cross link to your website through a new section (currently in the process of being developed) called 'Online Buddies'.

Errata

The caption of Figure 1 in the article 'C/C++ Code Interpretation for Fun and Profit' by Ankur Kumar Sharma published on Page 59 of LINUX For You, June 2010, is incorrect. The correct caption is: 'Tcc interpreting multiple files C program'.

Also, the name of one of the winners of the May 2010 Code Chef contest was printed wrongly as Anuvrat Singh. The correct name is Anuvrat Parashar.

We regret these errors.
