

A Beginner's Tutorial to the GIMP 'The Sizzling Vector'

Welcome to the eighth tutorial in this series on the GIMP. Here we learn about Urban Art, the hottest new form of graphics editing, on our favourite software, the GIMP.

For decades, we have witnessed a lot of styles in digital art, be it the Aura, Aurora, Swirlish or the Aero sort of art. The latest talk of the town is Urban Art. Well, to be precise, it is the easiest form of art I have ever tried. You don't need to blend curves around, provide shadows, or other mind-boggling steps. All you need is a set of brushes that will fit the bill, along with a bit of imagination, to add extra glamour to your wallpaper or other art work. If you have the requisites, it is just a matter of time. Once you get the hang of it, you will take hardly 5 minutes to create an image in this style.

Yes—a wallpaper in 5 minutes!

Before we get started, you must know that unlike other styles, there are some prerequisites for Urban Art. In order to provide such effects, we thrive on vector brushes that are freely available on the Net. All you need is to grab the brushes, and let the 'ink' flow. There are a number of choices available, but for this tutorial, I will be particular regarding the selection. All the brushes provided/listed are copyright of their respective owners. The brushes I used are:

- Splatter Brushes from ka05: ka05.deviantart.com
- Mixed brush set: Various authors
