

Figure 1: The installation boot menu

Figure 2: Partition Menu

Installation

Ubuntu Studio has to be installed from the alternate DVD image (as it is around 1.8 GB, which is too big for a CD). It has no graphical point-and-click installation feature, but uses a text-based installer.

It's not very difficult, fairly self-explanatory and quite easy to understand and proceed with installation. After selecting your region, time zone, keyboard layout, etc, the installation begins. The partitioning tool (Figure 2) will assist you to set up your partitions; you must at least select a root partition and swap space. Generally, swap partitions are optional, but as multimedia-intensive work uses up a lot of resources, it is recommended to use one.

Figure 3: Installation in progress

Figure 4: Software selection

Figure 5: Default desktop

Installation takes quite a while to complete, compared to Ubuntu. This is mainly due to a large number of applications being installed. Figure 3 shows the installation in progress.

It is a good idea to configure your network when prompted, mainly because Ubuntu Studio doesn't ship Network Manager by default—unlike Ubuntu. The reason apparently is that it might interfere with audio processing. So, to get Internet access working, you should ideally configure

TechnoMail - Enterprise Email Server
Anti SPAM, Anti Virus, Email Content Filtering

Firewall, Internet Access Control
Content Filtering, Site Blocking

Bandwidth Management System

Managed Email Hosting Solutions

TechnoInfotech®

1, Vikas Permisses, 11 Bank Street, Fort, Mumbai, India - 400 001. Mobile: 09326087210. info@technoinfotech.com