CHENNAI

A Pictorial Round-up

The sixth edition of Open Source India 2010 turned out to be a treasure trove for open source developers, techies, entrepreneurs and enthusiasts, alike. Thousands of people attended the three day conference. Dr Debesh Das, Minister-in-charge, Department of Information Technology, Government of West Bengal, inaugurated the event, which was held for the second consecutive year at the Chennai Trade Centre on 19 September.

Open Source India (formerly known as LinuxAsia), started in 2004 with the mission to accelerate the growth and adoption of open source software in Asia. In alignment with this goal, this year's agenda was, on the one hand, to bridge the gap between the 'community' and the 'industry'; and on the other, promote the usage of open source software among Indian businesses and developers.

The excitement surrounding OSI Days was least surprising considering the names associated with the event. Google, Facebook, Ingres, C-DAC, Yahoo!, HP, Dell, Microsoft and Zend were all part of this mega event. Both Indian greats and international masterminds shared their knowledge and experience at this event. Burkhardt Roger, David Recordon, David Coallier, Denis Lafont-Trevisan, Eben Moglen, Fabien Potencier, Jakub Vrána, John Smedley, Kevin Schroeder, Thomas Rathborne, Jonathan Gray, Markus Franz, John Smedley, Rajdeep Dua, Siddhartha Agarwal, Sreekandh Balakrishnan, Sonali Minocha, Vijay Rajgopalan and many other stalwarts from the open source world enthralled the audience with their vast knowledge.

The event was jointly organised by the Forum for Open Source Initiative in India (FOSII), the EFY Group, Linux for You magazine and OSSCube.

Here's an attempt to recapitulate the events for our readers, pictorially...
