Three cheers for the Securing Apache series!

I recently got a chance to read the LINUX For You August edition. It was great to see articles on Net filters, securing Apache, and integrating MS Active Directory with Linux. I am sure such articles will be of great help to novices as well as power users.

Could I suggest that you keep the main illustration at the start of an article a bit smaller in size as it might then create more space for effective article presentation. Also, please try to make the font size, especially for the coding sections, a bit bigger for easy readability.

ED: Thanks for your compliments on the LFY August edition. As regards your suggestions on the font size and design of the layouts, we will surely consider them.

We look forward to your continued suggestions regarding improvements. Such inputs will surely help us in our endeavour to make the magazine better and better!

I just loved the article published under the Securing Apache series in the LFY August issue. I must thank you for taking us readers on such a fantastic joyride towards Web security. I think this series will help me build my career in the security domain. Keep it coming!

I immensely enjoyed reading your article on Securing Apache in the August edition. Though I have attended seminars and workshops on cyber security, I never got to know about Apache and SQL injection in such detail. I also loved the article on Nmap. I hope LINUX For You will continue publishing articles to generate awareness on cyber security. I hope the Securing Apache series will cover more information on Web attacks in forthcoming editions of the magazine.

ED: Dear Aaditya and Deepshikha, We are thrilled to know that you found the Securing Apache series useful and interesting.

Deepshikha, we have taken note of your suggestions regarding what you'd like to read more about as part of this series. We will surely pass on these inputs to the author.

A Voyage to the Kernel archives CD

First of all, thanks for bundling the complete package of A Voyage to the Kernel on the CD. I look forward to receiving more such archives bundled with your CDs, in the future.

I also have one request to make. Could you send me an article, which was printed in one of the issues of LFY, last year, on 'Pen drive login, using udev'. I read it in a library but now can't find the magazine there. It would be great if you could send the PDF of this article to me by e-mail.

—Mayank Gupta, sharpsspecial007@gmail.com

ED: Thank you for the feedback. We have received so many requests for LFY archives. Considering this, we have started an initiative to bundle the popular archives, based on topics or themes, so that our readers could revisit the LFY content that they like (in the digital format), as and when they want to.

Regarding the article that you requested, we will surely look for it and try to send you the PDF.

An edition on Java, PHP

I am a regular reader of LFY. I think your team is doing a great job. It would be great if you could add one special section dedicated to Java and PHP so that people who are willing to give some information related to these technologies, can write on these subjects.

Also, I wanted to know where could I send my queries related to problems that I face while working on Linux?

—Nirav Joshi, joshi.nirav21@gmail.com

ED: Thanks for the feedback. We will try and include these articles in forthcoming issues. If you have the interest and the expertise on Java and PHP, and would like to share your thoughts with our readers in the form of an article, write to us in detail about the topics you would like to cover. We would love to have you writing for LFY!

As regards Linux-related queries, you may send those to lfyedit@efyindia.com

LFY availability in the US

Is this magazine available in the US?

—Satish Pate, satish.lx@gmail.com

ED: Currently, we only provide subscription copies in the US. You may subscribe to the magazine online @ <http://bit.ly/lfy-subscribe>. One year overseas subscription rate for LFY magazine is US$ 120. We are shortly planning to launch the eZine version of the magazine.
