

ANDROID TABLETS

INNOVATING TO STAY AHEAD

With the craze for the Android OS hitting an all-time high, the LFY team interacted with those in the Android-based tablet space to learn more about their brands' equity and where they faced the most competition from—Apple's iPad or the other Android-based tablets?

The gadget world, which is flooded with stylish hi-end gizmos, has spawned a generation of tech buffs over the past few years. With a heady mix of technology and style, tablets have made inroads into the lives of brand-loving young geeks or no-nonsense corporate honchos like never before. So much so that gadget lovers don't mind splurging heavily to acquire the latest model, just to indulge in their taste for technology. As the obsession for this hi-tech accessory reaches a fever pitch, the primary question in every gadget lover's mind would be whether to go in for Apple's iPad or its more economical competitor, an Android tablet? LFY gives you an update on the royal slugfest, the essence of Android, brand value and more.

Apple versus the rest

Even though the craze for the Android OS has gone viral, Apple's iPad continues to inspire deep loyalty from its die-hard

Gaurav Khanna, CEO,
Go Tech Digital Pvt Ltd

followers. So which of them is leading the market—Apple's iPad or the competing brands and models that offer Android? "Apple serves a niche segment and so we are not in the race with it. The other brands offering Android are definitely our competition, as all are devising ways to offer quality products at an effective price," says Gaurav Khanna, CEO, Go Tech Digital Pvt Ltd, a brand that recently launched a health-oriented tablet Funtab Fit.

Those at Zync Global Pvt Ltd, the company that upped its brand quotient recently by launching its lowest price tablet, the Z-999 Plus, with features that include calling, GPRS and Bluetooth, echo similar views. Says Ashish Garg, a director