India armed with its first 1 GBps Internet connection

From downloading a two-hour high definition movie in a mere 30 seconds to watching your favourite video on YouTube at a breathtaking pace, you can do it all now! Thanks to Google, which recently launched its 1

GBps (1000 MBps) Internet connection at Startup Village in Kerala, which is the world's largest tech incubator. Startup Village is only the second place after Kansas City, US, to be blessed with this super-fast connectivity.

The facility was formally introduced on November 17, 2012, by the state's chief minister, Oommen Chandy, giving a shot in the arm to Startup Village in its mission to churn out world-class start-ups from Indian campuses.

"Startup Village aims to build the elements of a world class tech ecosystem to realise the dream of a Silicon Coast in India. The vision, at this grand scale, is driven by one of India's most successful IT entrepreneurs, Kris Gopalakrishnan, co-founder of Infosys, and is powered by the Department of Science and Technology, Government of India. The Startup Village at Kochi is the first location for this national pilot programme, which would be replicated at other parts of India in the coming months," said Sanjay Vijayakumar, chairman, Startup Village, in a statement.
