

Popular Android Apps

Android has a vast market today, and supports both free and paid-for apps on phone brands that range from Spice and Sony Xperia U to Samsung's Galaxy Note. Since this is the main reason consumers opt for Android, this article lists some nice apps that readers may enjoy using.

Evernote

With our increasing daily work-loads, we forget simple things like buying groceries. A notable solution is Evernote—an easy-to-use app to help you stay organised. You can capture pictures and add a to-do list to it.

I make notes with Evernote every now and then. I love it because I can also check the notes on my computer, if synced with my desktop or laptop. It's even possible to sync content you want to keep in your Google Chrome account by installing a browser extension. I do wish, though, that it could do simple calculations—like totalling numbers (prices) in a list.

Some ways to use Evernote to simplify your personal and professional life are:

- Study smarter: Snap photos of whiteboards and books.
- Very useful in business, for making notes at meetings and drafting agendas.
- Planning a trip with your family? Track travel plans, tickets and passports.
- Create a grocery or task list and check things off as you complete them.
- Sync your mobile with the desktop, and view the Web pages saved in Evernote on your desktop.
- Capture ideas and sudden flashes of inspiration with a single click.
- Keep track of your favourite product prices for making comparisons while shopping.
- Keep finances in order: save receipts, bills, contracts and a lot more.
- Save paper by taking snapshots of restaurant menus, business cards and labels.

The app requires Android 1.6 and above; its current version is 4.3.5. With a rating of 4.7, this is a must-use app.
