magazine hits the newsstands.

You can also subscribe to LFY's eZine version. The cost of the subscription would be lower for this option. To do this, log on to <http://ezine.lfyimag.com/welcomebuzine.asp>

Make the LFY website mobile-friendly

I really like your LFY website, www.linuxforu.com, a lot. However, since I browse the Internet mostly through my mobile, I would really appreciate it if you could release your website in a format optimised for mobile viewing.

ED: We are delighted to know that you like the LFY website. In fact we are in the process of revamping the site for faster and smoother browsing and a better design.

Regarding your request to make the LFY website optimised for viewing on mobile phones, work is already underway. We are also working towards making the content of the magazine available via Apple's iStore and Android's Market. This will enable readers to access the magazine over devices like tablets and mobile phones, easily.

Linux Mint rocks!

I have been a long-time subscriber of LFY and have benefited immensely from reading the magazine, both professionally and personally. I have learnt about the configuration of CDMA modems from LFY. To avoid this 'extra' work, I wanted to try the GSM modem and so I connected my Huawei GSM phone (type 1280) after booting Linux Mint 10, which was bundled with the LFY January 2011 issue. All I had to do was, go to the 'Mobile Broadband' tab under 'Network Connections' to find that the phone had been recognised without any work on my part.

It is interesting to note that the Huawei phone has only Windows drivers. However, since Linux Mint comes with some Windows drivers, the phone worked without any tweaking.

Thank you, LFY, for packing the distro with the magazine!
