

Asus to Launch Wi-Fi Google Nexus 7 Tablet in India by June!

Peter Chang, country manager, Asus

Google has been rolling out its Nexus smartphones and tablets in the global market, but the Indian market has still been left largely untapped. Well, things appear to be changing and Google's OEM partner, Asus, is looking to bring in the first Nexus device into India soon. Team OSFY spoke to Peter Chang, the newly appointed country manager of Asus, about the launch of Nexus devices in India, the firm's strategy around Android, and much more. Read on...

Q Asus is the first Google Nexus tablet maker. Google chose you for making the 17.7-cm (7-inch) device. Despite much success and worldwide acceptance of your tablet PC, Google chose Samsung for the 25.4-cm (10-inch) variant of the tablet. Any reasons?

It is totally Google's prerogative to choose its OEM partners. As you must have observed, it keeps the ball rolling. We have had a good relationship with the Android maker and we look forward to more such tie-ups.

Q Do you think being the maker of a Nexus tablet adds to your existing reputation? How would you take advantage of the Nexus tag?

We hope to continue with the push that we got from the Nexus brand. Asus made Nexus 7, which although not launched in India officially, has become a great success worldwide. We don't know about the upcoming Nexus devices—whether we would make them or not—since Google has a multi-brand strategy with respect to its Nexus devices. In the future, we are