Dear Readers,

Oracle's acquisition of MySQL through the take-over of Sun Microsystems is being fiercely debated at the EU. Google will be launching its own phone next year. Red Hat's Q3 results beat market expectations. Firefox 3.5 has become the most popular Web browser. Dell has launched an Ubuntu-powered Zino desktop in India for Rs 16,000. Shuttleworth stepped down as the CEO of Canonical (Ubuntu). An open source powered Web tool claims to accurately predict earthquakes!

There's certainly been a lot of buzz around Linux and open source recently. Unfortunately, we could not cover most of these news items in the magazine because they hit the headlines while LINUX For You was going to press. We do realise that the 'print medium' has certain disadvantages. Thankfully, the Internet offers all the immediacy one requires, so that's how we plan to use our Web presence—to powerfully complement our print run.

So we have covered all this news and more on our official Twitter channel @LinuxForYou. If you want to receive the latest news on Linux and open source, or get updates on what's HOT right now, or learn about the new initiatives taken by the LINUX For You team, follow us on Twitter, and we can thus establish a stronger connection.

Soon, we will be integrating our Facebook and LinuxForU.com news section with our Twitter account, which means you will be able to get updates from our website, Twitter or Facebook.

While we have often spoken about the growing influence of the 'new media', it's only recently that we have ourselves started harnessing its potential.

In fact, you can play a major role in helping us use the new media better. First, by sending us ideas on what you feel we can do. If that can be accompanied by a 'How to', that would be even better. Second,

The Internet offers all the immediacy one requires, so that's how we plan to use our Web presence—to powerfully complement our print run you can connect with us through Twitter and Facebook. Third, you can point us to the latest news and happenings, and we, in turn, can re-tweet your inputs to update all @LinuxForYou followers. Lastly, you can spread the word about our online media amongst your friends and colleagues, and invite them to connect in too.

We have only hit the tip of the iceberg. I am sure there will be a lot of activity on this front in the coming few months.

Wishing you all a very Happy New Year!
Best Wishes,

On behalf of the entire LINUX For You team,
